Dear Delegates,

May I offer a sincere welcome to all participants to IAFOR’s first ECAH Conference in Europe. The conference is devoted to the twin themes of alienation, a well-established philosophical concept, and connectedness, a concept that is intended to draw attention to the possibility of overcoming alienation in its many forms.

The evidence for the reality of alienation as one way of describing different features of human life and explaining various forms of behaviour is substantial. Consequently, the justification of the term as a form of explanation is beyond question. What is open to question, and indeed investigation is what might count as effective methods of overcoming alienation, if indeed it can be overcome, is itself a leading question. It may be that the sum of all the systems into which life is locked, political, social, technological or economic, preclude any solution being either defined or implemented. On the other hand, some levels of alienation may yield to individual therapies or community activities in some form. It is around these questions that the conference theme was designed.

What makes the theme more difficult than being simply the definition of a problem and the search for a solution is the sheer complexity of how alienation has been defined by people from different backgrounds holding contrasting perspectives. It is hoped that the presentations here, through interdisciplinary and intercultural reflection, will provide a new paradigm for examining an old problem and perhaps new parameters within which even partial solutions may be advanced.

I am very much looking forward to connecting with you all over this weekend together.

Yours truly,

Stuart D.B. Picken

The Reverend Professor Stuart D. B. Picken
ECAH Conference Chair
Chairman of the International Advisory Board, IAFOR, Japan
Dear Delegates,

It is my great pleasure to welcome you to the International Academic Forum’s Inaugural European Conference on Language Learning (ECLL) here in Brighton. As this is a joint conference, I also bid welcome to my fellow academics from the Arts and Humanities disciplines, who are attending the Inaugural European Conference on Arts and Humanities (ECAH).

I, like many of you, am a teacher at heart. There is nothing that I enjoy more, than meeting with my fellow educators, to discuss, share and discover the latest in our field of language teaching and learning. That is what this European Conference on Language Learning is about. It affords us all the opportunity for renewing old acquaintances, making new contacts, and networking across higher education and beyond. With this inaugural conference here in Brighton being a joint conference with our friends from the Arts and Humanities, it makes for an even more informative and compelling conference than usual. This is a conference with true interdisciplinary opportunities for us to learn, engage and enjoy.

I have been fortunate to be involved with many of IAFOR’s programs in Japan, where as a Professor, I teach Education and English courses at Osaka Jogakuin University in Osaka. I personally am looking forward to sharing with you some of the insights that I have gained from my students back at Osaka Jogakuin. I am also looking forward to your presentations as well, taking onboard as many new ideas and approaches as I can to help my own students at home. As you will learn, IAFOR is working on a variety of interesting projects, both here in Europe and in the Asia-Pacific region — organizing conferences, publishing research, developing networks and much more.

We have been really fortunate to put together a great slate of speakers with a wide range of experiences, and from many different teaching contexts. As you can see in the conference handbook, we have a great program set around our theme of “Shifting Paradigms: Informed Responses”—one that will surely spark some academic exchanges and I’m looking forward to hearing your insights over the next four days.

As we all know education changes lives and ECLL is all about education. Therefore, come ready to change and be changed!

Happy Conferencing!

Steve Cornwell, Ed.D.

Concurrent Speaker Sessions

Concurrent Sessions will run on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. They are generally organized into streams. Sessions include two, three or sometimes four presenters. Each presenter has thirty minutes including Q and A time. The session length reflects the number of presenters.

Presentations and Equipment

All rooms will be equipped with a MacBook computer pre-installed with PowerPoint, as well as a screen and an LCD projector. If you wish, you may directly link your own PC laptop, although we advise you to use the computer provided by plugging in your USB flash drive.

We recommend that you bring two copies of your presentation in the case that one fails, and suggest sending yourself the presentation by email as a third and final precaution.

Session Chairs

Session Chairs are expected to introduce themselves and other speakers (briefly), and ensure that the session begins and ends on time, and that the time is divided fairly between the presentations. Each presenter should have no less than 30 minutes in which to present his or her paper, and respond to any questions.

The session chair is asked to assume this timekeeping role, and to this end, a yellow and red colored timekeeping card is used as a visual cue for presenters, letting them know when they have 5 minutes remaining, and when they must stop.

Please follow the order in the programme, and if for any reason a presenter fails to show, please keep to the original timeslots as delegates use the programme to plan their attendance.

A Polite Request to All Participants

Participants are requested to arrive in a timely fashion for all addresses, whether to their own, or to those of other presenters. Presenters are reminded that the time slots should be divided fairly and equally between the number of presentations, and that they should not overrun.

We recommend that the 30 minutes presentation timeslot be divided as follows: 20 minutes for the paper and 10 minutes for Q and A.

Poster Sessions & Poster Requirements

The poster frames are B1 and so it is recommended that posters be no larger than B1 (707mm x 1000mm/27.8 inches x 39.4 inches), A1 (594mm x 841mm/23.4 inches x 39.4 inches) is also fine. If your poster is outsized, then we will be able to provide tape.
Internet
There will be wireless Internet connection throughout the hotel. However, this can be temperamental and we would suggest that you do not rely on live connection for your presentation, or have back up screen shots in the case of internet down time.

For your convenience, there will also be a limited number of computers in the registration area.

Printing
There will be a printer behind the information desk in the base room, and we are able to offer a complimentary printing service of up to ten A4 sheets should you need this. Please be advised that printing may not be available in peak times.

Badges
When you check in, you will receive a conference package, which includes your name badge. Wearing your badge IS required for entrance to the sessions. If you lose your badge it can be replaced for a fee of 40 GBP. You must wear your badge at all times during the Conference.

If you are not wearing your badge, security will stop you and ask you to show your ID and evidence that you are registered. Those unable to show proof will be escorted from the Conference by security.

There are (4) colors of badges indicating the type of conference participant:
BLUE: Presenters and General Audience
YELLOW: Keynote and Featured Speakers
BLUE: Conference Exhibitors and Affiliates
BLACK: IAFOR Staff & Board Members

What to Wear & Bring
Attendees generally wear business casual attire. You may want to bring along a light jacket or sweater, as the temperature in meeting rooms is often difficult to control.

Do not leave personal items or conference bags unattended anywhere in the Thistle Brighton as this will be taken away by security. For the enjoyment of all participants, inappropriate behavior will not be tolerated and violators will be removed from the premises.

Smoking
Smoking is not permitted in the Thistle Brighton.

Time allowing, the session will also have a question and answer period in which delegates can contribute to a discussion on change, and how they deal with it.
With a PhD in American Studies from Yale University (2004), Aaron Sachs is currently associate professor of history at Cornell University and the author of two books: The Humboldt Current: Nineteenth-Century Exploration and the Roots of American Environmentalism (Viking/Penguin, 2006), and Arcadian America: The Death and Life of an Environmental Tradition (Yale U. Press, Jan. 2013). My new project pivots around Lewis Mumford’s rediscovery of Herman Melville in the 1920s and explores the ways in which both authors sought to cope with the “everyday trauma” of modernity.

Spotlight Speech: From Trauma to Rediscovery: Lewis Mumford and the Modern Search for Connection through Time and Space

In the fall of 1919, the thought came to Lewis Mumford: “Perhaps we are at the beginning of a new Dark Age.” Several recent studies have posited the post-World War I era as the true dawn of American modernity, and theorists of modernity have long pointed to a sense of dread as one of the new period’s defining characteristics. I would go further and propose that there was a traumatic logic to modernity. Mumford was particularly sensitive to this logic, and in his early writings on technology and the city, he made a point of accepting the reality of modern alienation but also of proposing various ways to counter it. Anticipating the work of trauma theorists, Mumford sought not to “recover” from his sense of fragmentation and inundation but to work through it by opening himself to small, ordinary experiences of “rediscovery,” adopting a practice like that of Michel de Certeau’s walker in the city. Particularly in his scholarly rediscovery of the nineteenth century (he participated in the resuscitation of Melville), Mumford managed to find the kind of continuities that could foster cultural connectedness: Melville, too, had felt alone, had struggled against abstract market forces and bureaucratic institutions and mechanistic rhythms. Modernity was overwhelming—this was an “age of destruction”—but in Melville’s “cosmic defiance,” Mumford found a new faith in the meaning of struggle itself. And thanks to Melville’s penchant for giving his characters “a drenching in the nakedness of natural scenes”, Mumford rediscovered the potential wildness of everyday environments.
Roberto Bertoni is Associate Professor of Italian and Fellow at Trinity College Dublin. He has published on Italian post 2nd World War topics, has translated a number of Irish authors, and founded and edits the series of volumes ‘Quaderni italiani di cultura’ and the journal online Carte allineate.

Spotlight Speech: The Innocent Man (착한 남자): Alienation of Characters and Audience, Acquisition of New Identity, Catharsis
One of the purposes of this paper is to explore reactions to a Korean serial taken as an example of the genre of “modern tv melodrama” in which it belongs. The paper will examine psychological impact and structure, and the reflections elaborated in terms of emotional content, narrative reference to some classics, and globalized aspects. Alienation is a pervasive theme in this work as the protagonist sacrifices himself to protect his lover who does not reciprocate, in fact she abandons him. Ethical integrity, revenge, repentance, and restoration of self-confidence through love, as well as changes undertaken by characters, are responses to their initial alienated condition. Meanwhile one wonders to what extent the audience goes through a process of alienation from reality, or rather does identification with the mirror of these actions in the real world prevail?

Spotlight Speech: Development of Narrative Writing Skills and Oral Proficiency in Young JHL Learners in a Saturday Japanese School in California

Interest in issues surrounding heritage-language education in the U.S. is growing with the recognition that heritage language learners possess more potential for reaching the proficiency level necessary in professional fields than those who learn the language as a foreign language. However, there has been no longitudinal study conducted on the language proficiency of learners who learn Japanese as a heritage language (J-HL) in the United States until two years ago, when we initiated two studies in Southern California, one at a Saturday Japanese school and one at a dual Japanese immersion school. This paper presents selected results of the first two years of a study at the Saturday Japanese school concerning the linguistic development of young learners of J-HL and learners of Japanese as a foreign language (JFL). A total of 32 students from grades K-12 have been participating in this study. We analyzed the learners’ narrative writing skills, using the stories that the students wrote narrating a series of four pictures, along with their oral proficiency measured by the Oral Proficiency Assessment for Bilingual Children (OBC), an interview protocol developed for young Japanese-language learners by the Canadian Association for Japanese Language Education. The results indicate that, although a ceiling effect was observed among some J-HL students, both J-HL and JFL students are making progress in certain areas, including vocabulary and sentence structures. We suspect that the Saturday school played a positive role in the development of Japanese proficiency of these children, but further study is necessary.
Olesya Orlova
Kemerovo State University, Russia

Olesya Orlova was born in Kemerovo in the Russian Federation in 1978. Always interested in the English language, she studied English as a Foreign Language during her childhood. Later, Olesya when choosing her University studies she enrolled in the then Kemerovo State University Foreign Languages Department as an English major. Her graduating thesis (candidate dissertation) was devoted to “The Russia Concept in the American Journalistic Discourse” (2005). Following her graduation in 2005, Olesya undertook an Assistant Professorship at Kemerovo State University in the Philology and Journalism Department. During this time, Olesya gave lectures on the History of Foreign Journalism, Feature journalism, and lead the Universities series of Seminars on Discourse Research in the Mass Media. In 2010 she became the Deputy Head of the Philology and Journalism Department, and in 2012 undertook the role of Head of the Postgraduate Research Department. During this time, Olesya began her doctoral studies. Now in 2013 as a Principal Lecturer in the Philology and Journalism Department at Kemerovo State University, she revels in continuing her teaching and research workload, inspiring another generation of students. Her current interests are concentrated within the area of Political Journalism, though she still continues to lecture on Feature Journalism and leads students researching Mass Media Discourse.

Olesya has published more than 60 publications during her time at Kemerovo, among them scientific articles, manuals and the monography “Stereotypes of Russia and Russians”. Her spotlight session at the conference will focus on the area of national stereotypes of Russia and Russians as a means of connected, identity and alienation between cultures. Olesya is married, and has two young daughters.

Spotlight Speech: National Stereotypes as Means of Connectedness, Identity and Alienation
The main target of this paper is to discuss national stereotypes of Russia and Russians as means of connectedness, identity and alienation between cultures. Homogeneous stereotypes (self-stereotypes, i.e. stereotypes of the mother culture) are viewed as a means of connectedness. Stereotypes are, by origin, destined to reflect and to create connectedness, because they have their source in “in-group favoritism” social practice. As soon as a stereotype is born it becomes a means of mutual understanding between the representatives of this culture. For example, in Russian culture a sense of collectivity is very strong and with it a stereotype that only a strong political leader, a tsar, can effectively rule is connected.

Heterogeneous stereotypes are “them”-stereotypes, or stereotypes of other cultures. They are close to prejudices and are considered to be mental constructs which may be barriers for effective communication between nations. Thus they may be understood as means of alienation. For example, the American mass media deliver a stereotype that Russia is not democratic and doesn’t want democracy. So, some actions of Russia may be interpreted in the way the stereotype dictates which is rather destructive for mutual understanding between the nations.

Identity stereotypes are an intermediate type of national stereotypes which help nations to identify each other’s cultural belonging. To this group refer banya, balalaika, bear and other stereotypes of symbolic nature. So, in the globalizing world the problems of alienation between nations may be examined through the prism of stereotypes.

University of Westminster, UK

Daniela Nadj, LLB, LLM, PhD is a graduate of Queen Mary College, Cornell University and the University of Westminster. Currently a lecturer in law at the University of Westminster, she has lectured in the following subjects: The United Nations System for the Protection of Human Rights; UK Human Rights Law; International Criminal Law; Public Law, EU Law, Evidence and Contract Law. During the academic year 2011-2012, she acted as senior lecturer in law/LLB programme coordinator at Middlesex University, Mauritius. Daniela’s primary research interests lie in the fields of international criminal law, human rights, feminist legal theory and armed conflict. Her research focuses on international wartime sexual violence jurisprudence and its impact on women in the current political and legal moment.

This paper provides a critical feminist analysis of international wartime sexual violence jurisprudence, as it is constructed in current feminist scholarship and the surrounding debate. Sexual violence against women has been a greatly topical issue within recent years in both scholarship and the popular imagination. Key legal developments in this area of the law have emerged from the international ad-hoc tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and Rwanda in particular. Wartime sexual violence is obviously a feminist issue, as it is a crime that disproportionately affects women. Its relevance as a subject of interest has been sustained by a plethora of legal successes delivered by international criminal tribunals, which have successfully reinterpreted international law to encapsulate the gender-specific harms perpetrated against women. The paper provides a critical snapshot of these developments, while at the same time seeking to engage with questions around human rights, identity, gender, armed conflict, culture and violence.

Miho Inaba has over 10 years of experience teaching Japanese. She was awarded her MA in Japanese Language Education from the Graduate School of Japanese Applied Linguistics, Waseda University (Tokyo, Japan) in 2004, and her PhD in Japanese Applied Linguistics from the School of Languages, Cultures and Linguistics, Monash University (Melbourne, Australia) in 2012. She is currently teaching Japanese at Lund University (Sweden) as a senior lecturer. Her research interests include L2 literacy practices, language learning strategies and autonomous language learning. Recently, she has been particularly interested in the influence of pop culture on L2 learning as well as learning strategies & ICT more generally, with papers on these topics having been published since 2012.

What is the Role of “language classes” in Autonomous Learning?: The Implications from Japanese Language Learners’ L2 Activities Outside the Classroom

The opportunities for second language (L2) learning and use outside the classroom have been viewed as important factors in mastering target languages. There have been multiple studies undertaken on this topic from the perspective of autonomous language learning. Recently, a growing number of studies has particularly examined the social and contextual influence on learners’ L2 learning and usage opportunities, and revealed that various factors affected the opportunities for out-of-class language learning. However, the influence of language classes themselves on language acquisition in out-of-class language learning and use has been relatively unexplored, although many learners have mentioned that they still learn target languages predominantly in classroom settings.

This paper discusses how language classes affect L2 learners’ out-of-class language learning, based on my study of L2 literacy practices of learners of Japanese at an Australian university (Inaba, 2011). Data were collected from these participants in the form of “learning diaries” about their L2 learning activities, as well as the materials which they utilised. These data sources are coupled with background interviews of students and stimulated recall interviews. Drawing on Activity Theory (Leont’ev, 1978; Engeström, 1999, 2001), this study revealed that the participants’ language classes had various influences on their out-of-class language learning, such as enhancing their motivations, providing language resources, and creating opportunities to notice the effectiveness of their voluntary activities. Based on these findings, this paper argues that language classes are, in fact, able to encourage autonomous learning outside the classroom.

The vision of iafor grew out of the perceived need to fill a vacuum in the communication and exchange activities of the academic world. Its mission arose out of examining that space and investigating why it existed. The vacuum existed because of the lack of opportunity for serious and thoughtful exchange between academics, members of the global business community, and practitioners in the fields of human endeavor that linked these groups together. In the field of education, for example, we have academic theorists, educational managers (political decision makers and organizational directors) and classroom teachers with their support staff in IT, library work, exchange programs, and specialist fields. But how often do they have the opportunity to interact?

Moving beyond one particular field, larger questions arise. What function should universities prioritize in the 21st century? What do businesses see as their contribution to social and global wellbeing? How can people on the ground, trying to implement improvements that will transform human life, best be supported? And perhaps above all, what are the agendas that will drive mechanisms to enable these groups to interact effectively.

One piece of distilled thought that came from early exchanges at an iafor conference was the recognition that some of the rhetoric of concern about the problems of developing nations was perhaps over-focused on the term “poverty” because it can be defined only in a relative way. “Hunger” was put forward as being more immediate and itself a contributory factor to poverty, rather than the other way round. One key to the hunger issue could be the provision of safe drinking water, or water for irrigation in some contexts, while flood management might be necessary elsewhere. These, in and by themselves become valuable only insofar as they help to relieve hunger in specific contexts.

iafor is affording opportunities that do not exist elsewhere. The base is Osaka, Japan’s great commercial and manufacturing hub, one symbol of the emerging Pacific economy that in time will eclipse the long dominant Atlantic zone. iafor conferences present those taking part with three unique dimensions of experience. First of all, it encourages interdisciplinary activity to be expanded. Depending on the field, this can face varying degrees of difficulty, ranging from discouragement to downright prohibition. Those overly dependent on fixed academic structures often see lateral thinking as a threat. None of these negatives apply in iafor. Its purpose is to generate new approaches that cross any disciplinary lines. The principle employed is to let the imagination permit intuitive responses to questions. There are no panels of critics. There are simply people who want to listen and reflect. The model of academic work as potholing is replaced by the metaphor of mountaineering. While respecting the need for solid and well-founded academic work, we feel the need to go beyond it from time to time to discover fresh approaches to old questions.

Secondly, it facilitates the heightening of intercultural awareness. Again, iafor encourages innovation through cross-cultural perception. Cultural roots influence people in their attitudes more than most would realize or admit. The need to see and internalize insights gained from other viewpoints is met by a process of steady illumination.

Thirdly, it promotes the broadening of international exchange. We may live in a globalized world, but in reality parochialism still holds sway. The collapse of the U.S.S.R and the break-up of Yugoslavia led to the re-establishment of numerous former countries. While this may be desirable for the peoples concerned, it merely adds to the world’s cultural confusion. Exchange leads to explanation and that helps the growth of intercultural awareness.

iafor makes all of these developments possible in one gathering. An iafor conference is not a substitute for specialist conferences. It is intended to be an alternative that functions as a balance or even a corrective to the extreme tendencies that can arise from more narrowly defined research parameters. In short, iafor is promoting and facilitating a new multifaceted approach to one of the core issues of our time, namely globalization and its many forms of growth and expansion. Awareness of how it cuts across the worlds of business, and academia, along with its impact on societies and institutions is one of the driving forces that has given iafor its momentum and is making it a pioneer in this global age.

IAFOR Journals

The International Academic Forum's Journals conform to the highest academic standards of international peer review, and are published in accordance with the IAFOR publishing commitment to make all of our published materials available online.

Journals FAQ

How are journal editors appointed?
Journal Editors are appointed by the International Academic Forum's leadership, under the guidance of the Chairman of the International Advisory Board. The term of appointment is for one issue, to be renewed by mutual consent.

How do we ensure academic integrity?
Once appointed, the editor is free to appoint his or her own editorial team and advisory members. All papers published in the journal have been subjected to the rigorous and accepted processes of academic peer review. Neither editors nor members of the editorial team are remunerated for their work. Authors will never be asked to “contribute” towards publication costs.

How are papers selected?
Journal Editors may accept papers through an open call, and proposed articles may be sent directly to the respective editors.

A small number of papers from the associated IAFOR conference proceedings may also be selected by the journal editor(s) for reworking and revising subject to normal processes of review. It is expected that between 5 and 10 percent of papers included in any given conference proceedings will be developed for inclusion in the associated conference journal.

How are IAFOR Journals related to IAFOR conferences?
IAFOR's journals reflect the interdisciplinary and international nature of our conferences and are organized thematically. Papers included in the associated conference proceedings may be considered for reworking by the editor(s), and would then be subjected to the same processes of peer review as papers submitted by other means.

IAFORD Keynotes

The IAFOR Keynotes series is a collection of keynote addresses, or associated papers given at our conferences. Presented as a part of the open research archive, the Keynotes series provides an example of the range and quality of speakers at IAFOR events. These keynotes are lightly reworked, and contain references, but are otherwise true to the original address. Many can also be seen in video format on our YouTube page. Whether you were present at the conference or not, the keynotes are thoughtful addresses by senior academics, the content of which may help your research.

Special Series & Monographs

The International Academic Forum is publishing a number of special monographs in print and online form. One such publication is a selection of haiku from the Annual Vladimir Devidé Haiku Award.

Eye Magazine

It has taken months in planning but we have finally launched our first issue to showcase and encourage inspiring and intellectual discussion. At IAFOR we felt that you, as a reader of Eye, should also have the opportunity to contribute to this new exciting magazine venture. Thus we hope that it can give you the opportunity to also creatively focus your own vision, perspective and insight as a contributor to future editions. We trust that Eye magazine will be an informative, interesting and exciting way for us to communicate with you, and you in turn with us. In future editions we hope to bring you a wide range of articles and stories ranging from interviews and reviews, through to showcases of the newest, most innovative and thought-provoking ideas from academia. We hope you enjoy the first edition!
